

Khalil: Palestine state not Egypt's goal in current talks with Israel

Jerusalem Post Staff

Egypt's Prime Minister, Dr. Mustaphn Khall, pointed out yesterday that Egypt was not negotiating with Israel over the establishment of a Palestinian state - but only over the transitional self-government outlined in the Camp David accords. Khalll made the point during an in-" il., terview broadcast on Cairo Radio. ٩π. Camp David, said Khalif, provided only for free election of the celfgoverning authority that would replace the Israeli military government.

Minister of State Butros Ghali said yesterday. meanwhile, that a "transformation" in Israeli public opinion and a "full partner" rolc hy the U.S. could together help to narrow the wide gap between the governments of Israel and Egypt on the Palestinian issue. Ghalf spoke to newsmen in Geneva, where he is attending n UN conference on inter-national law.

Egypt, he said, holds that the Americans have an "extremely important role" to play in the talks while Israel would like to reduce that nole.

The minister denounced the Israeli West Bank settlements as illegal hut said they were a "weapon used chiefly for internal reasons" by the Israelis and had a "symbolic rather than a real value."

He said European nations could help pave a way to a solution by aiding Palestinians materially and politically. He said preparations for assisting a future autonomous government should begin now. He niso proposed that Enropean parliamentary groups should visit the occupied territories to check into conditions of the Palestinians living favour of more countries granting full recognition to the PLO as long as they were taking a radical stance against the peace process. The minister had no forecast on whether the Arah diplomntie offensive against Egypt - "the virulence was perhaps not expected by us" would be stepped up in the next few months or would abate. But he said that with one million Egyptian

Carter, Brezhnev at Vienna U.S., Soviets argue over M.E., Africa

- U.S. President Jimmy VIENNA. Carter and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev plainly differed on world problems in their summit talks here vesterday, but agreed on the vital necessity of preventing the mistakes that could spark off a nuclear holocaust. U.S. officials said the atmosphere at the first meeting was far more releved and informal than they had expected, even when Carter and Brezhnev were explaining policies and actions that worried the other. Officials said some differences were over "regional turbulence" seen here as n reference to the Middle East and to Moscow's support for revolutionary movements in Southern Africa and elsewhere.

Brezhnev at one point spoke about "inevitable change, and the struggle for freedom and liberation." Carter agreed that change was inevitable. But apparently etreseing hie critleisme of Soviet and Cuhan military activities in Africa said that restraint must he shown.

The two leaders met three times yesterday in two formal meetings end at a working dinner. The first session, at the U.S. Emhassy in the morning, was devoted to Inter-national issues in which the two superpowers have an interest. In the second afternoon ecasion, also at the U.S. Embassy, the two leaders dealt mainly on aspects of the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty II (SALT-II) which they are due to sign tomorrow afterno

Scheduled for two hours, the mor-ning meeting ended in less than 90 minutes when Brezhnev, 72 and ailing, pushed his chair hack from the 10-metre conference table. Others followed suit.

Carter later told reporters it was "a good meeting," and White House press secretary Jody Powell, noting there was a good bit of give-and take, termed it "pretty exciting." In the afternoon session Brezhnev was flanked by Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and Defence Minister Dmitri Ustinov. A fourth member of the Polithuro, Konstantin Chernenko, n protege of Brezhnev. was also on hand.

Carter, holding handwritten note as he walked into the conference, led a U.S. delegation that included Secretary of State Cyrus Vance. Defence Secretary Harold Brown and National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski.

In what officiale called remarkably eimllnr opening statements to the summit meeting, both leaders said in effect that "one miscalculation, just one nuclear ex-plosion, would he the final miscalculation and catastrophe.'

"God will not forgive us If we fail." said Brezhnev, an atheist. Carter, n deeply religious man, was apparently taken aback hy the Soviet leader's invocation of the deity, and wrote down Brezhnev'e remark at the top of his notes.

The extremely complicated trenty the two are to sign tomorrow sets limits on the number and type of strategic nuclear weapons - mainly missiles of various kinds -- that both sides can deploy. Carter is expected to have a hard joh convincing the U.S. Congress, which must ratify SALT, that the U.S. can verify Soviet observance of the treaty. The differences between Carter and Brezhnev cropped up again at their working dinner when the U.S. president spoke of the continuing U.S. commitment to human rights throughout the world - a sensitive sue in view of the Americans' activities te help Eussian dissidenta. He expressed the hope that U.S. ideas on human rights would be among the questions to be explored in his talks with Breshney, hat did not elaborate.

Carter said he and Brezhney "are working for ecoperation among nations, for the peaceful setticment of disputes, for economic development, social justice and human rights around the globe."

Brezhnev, responding, lashed out at those who foment or dream of precipitating clashes between the superpowers. Without identifying his targets, the Soviet leader told Carter: "It is our common duty to our people and, indeed to the entire world, not to allow such schemes to materialize. (Reuter, AP, UPI)

Lebanese border closed to UNIFIL By JOSHUA BBILLIANT

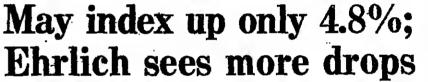

Jerusilem Post Reporter Israel last night closed its Lebanese border to all UNIFIL personnel after a colonel in the Nigerian unit was found smuggling arms and explosives for the terrorists.

The closure order was issued by O.C. Northern Command Aint Avigdor Ben-Gal. The IDF's spokesman said the border will remain closed until ways are found to prevent the recurrence of such incidents.

On February 18, the border was closed after a Senegalese officer. Papa Koll Saal was arrested in Acre for a similar offence. But Israel leter opened it after repeated UNIFIL readded that the IDF viewed "very gravely" the fact that a senior UN officer had been caught gun-running. The Post's reporter in the North adds;

Christian militia leader Major Sa'ad Haddad reacted sharply to news of the arms smuggling attempt. He called on his men to prevent UNIFIL forces from passing along internal roads, with the exception of the coast road from Tyre where they will make meticulous searches of all UNIFIL vehicles, irrespective of the rank of those travelling in them.

In a sharp protest to UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldhelm, Haddad said the incldent came only two days after condemnation of both Israeli end multila forces by the Security Council, and now it had heen proved to the entire world that UNIFIL permitted its forces to cooperate with the terrorists

Arabs' Eilon Moreh appeal is set for Wednesday

By DAVID RICHARDSON and IAN Black

Jerusalem Post Reporters The appeal of 17 Arab landowners from the village of Rujelh who petitioned the High Court of Justice against the establishment of a new Jewish settlement on their land will be heard before a panel of three justices on Wednesday.

Justice Shlomo Ascher on Friday turned down a request hy their counsel attorney Moein Khoury, to Lance temporary injunction barring construction and excavetion work on an 800-dunam site where the octilement of Ellon Moreh was established over a week ago.

The landowners claim in their suit that they have been in possession of the land for generations and that their title to it is recorded in the deeds office (or tabu) of the Nahlus district. They also claim that they have never heen served with formal requisition orders and that the court should regard the establishment of the settlement with the ald of IDF troops as an act of criminal trespass.

Moreover, they point out that the requisition of privately-owned land for the establishment of a Jewish settlement contradicts oft-heard government policy. The petitioners feel that the government'e decision came as the result of political pressure from Gush Emunim.

A mass meeting due to be held in Nahlus this morning to protest against the establishment of the Gush Emunim settlement of Etlon Moreh was banned by the military governor last night.

The meeting, which was expected to attract e large crowd from Nahlus and the surrounding villages, was to coincide with the start of work on another new settlement site -Karnel Shomron Bct - hetwcen Nablus and Tulkarm.

The protest was called for last week hy Mayor Bassam Shak'a, and it has the support of other bodies in the city, the largest on the West Bank, with a population of some 80, 000. The meeting will be held in the Nasser Mosque in the centre of the old town.

Perhaps the best argument for. taking the beaches out of the control of the municipalities would be a visit to the Tel Aviv waterfront. The city seems to have not only given up the struggle to keep the beaches clean and guard the lives of the bathers, but has betrayed its trust hy slicing off pieces of beach for use as a highway.

Dan beach: Some litter, no tar, no changing rooms, no shade, deck chairs IL10 per day, outdoor showers, restaurants nearby.

The beach here is not as narrow as It looks from the road, or even from the road works that will apparently continue all summer. Once one manages to climb over the rubble and go past the old shacks decomposing on the beach, the view is not too bad.

A stone breakwater, erected a few years ago, seems to have done its work. The water is clear and caim and a pleasure for swimming.

The nearest public toilets are in a park across the road. At least one hather was to be seen urinating against a wall on the beach itself. Call-girl ring suspects held

By YORAM BAR

Jerusalem Post Beporter TEL AVIV. - Yitzhak Yosifov. 40, and Esther Pantol, 23, of Ramat Gan were remanded for 10 days on Friday in the Tel Aviv Magistrate'e Court on suspicion of operating the call girl ring known as 'Monitin." The court also detained two wonen aged 47 and 29, who are suspected of working as prostitutes through the ring which operated out of room 701 of the El Al building in Tel Aviv's Raboy Ben-Yebuda. They were remanded for five days. A 24-year-old married woman, mother of two children aged three and a year and a half, was freed by the judge. Har husband told the court that he didn't know his wife was working as a prostitute while be was out at his job as a waiter. "We now have no choice but to move to a moshav and begin our lives anew," he told Judge David Bar-Ofir. The police representative told the magistrate that on Friday vice squad policemen raided "Monitin" ad arrested Yosifov and Pantol. Hundreds of names of clients, who paid a 'registration fee' of IL2,000 each, were discovered in the office. A long list of namee of women, come married and come with previous records of prostitution, was also found.

Inspector Shalom Apel told the court that the investigation was only beginning. "We're now checking the names list, but it'e hard to identify people because both prostitutes and elients registered undar false names." he said.

The suspects' attorneys asked for the release of their clients, claiming that they had violated no law.

HAIFA,- The Druse Zionist Organization plans to adopt a mili-tant line to "force the authorities to carry out the full integration of the . Druse community, as successive premiers have been promising for decades.'

At a press conference here on Friday, the organization's heads promised demonstrations outside Premier Menshem Begin's residence "to bring home to him the gravity of the situation." Discrimination and neglect of the 45,000 Israeli Druse has made young Druse vulnerable to anti-Israel incitement by left-wing circles, they said. Druse pride in wearing the Israel Army's uniform would turn to shame and rejection if the downhill trend was not stemmed and reversed, they feared.

Organization chairman Yussuf Naar e-Din warned that repeated claims by Israeli leaders that "there is no difference between Druse and Jews in Israel," have been "smashed on the rocks of reality." But, Druse would no longer acquiesce in mere co-existence, and would claim "the same treatment for Druse and Jews in every facet of life, and in the military, where we demand that every unit be open to Druse soldiers. and that only ability serve as criterion for acceptance.

They noted that there had already been desertions and refusals to serve hy Druse youth, which they explain-ed as a result of discrimination, "We intend to return our young men'e pride in the uniform of the Israel Defence Forces. Those who do not wish to serve must be told that the borders are open and they may leave the country.' they said.

The chairman of the 800-member Zionist organization charged that land cettlement problems in Druse, villages have still not been solved, although most villages are "strongholds" protecting Israel'e northern border. "Rather than helping the villagers develop industry and intensive agriculture, the Lands Authority makes trouble for us and expropriates lands that have passed from father to son for generations," he said. This, he implied, removed the motivation of young Druse to guard neighbouring Jewish villages gainst attack. The housing shortage hit young Druse harder than it did their Jewish contemporaries, he claimed. The then housing minister Gideon Patt had said at Daliat-el-Carmel, in January last year, that he was "ashamed of the Alignment's donothing record on the Druse" and had promised to return within six months to see housing going up. But he had never come back, had left their numerous letters unanswered, and not one house had gone up. Druse villages schooling was in-adequate and failed to give children an Israeli identity and national Valnes. School premises were woefully inadequate and there was not a single local council building. Health, social and other public services were only at about 10 per cent of the standard in Jewish communitles.

The organization also charges that party machinations and intrigues have delayed the appointment of religious court judgee for seven years, and have also held up an apintment to the Druse Supreme Spiritual Council.

Saying that the Druse were loyal to the State, the organization's head charged the authorities with "impotence" that was causing 'dangerous deterioration" in the young Druse's attitude to Israel.

moil because of these policies, and because of left-wing agitation among our youth. If we don't take immediate action, the hlood-tiee between Druse and Jews may be harmed." the organization's leaders

Rabbis to help social workers help elderly

By MOSHE KOHN Jerusalem Post Reporter

Professional social and communal workers and rabbis will soon be joining forces in a longrange, nationwide programme of assistance to the country'e elderly population.

A team comprising members of the two professions to draw up such a programme was formed at the conclusion of a half-day seminar at Jerusalem's Van Leer Institute last Wednesday, in which about 50 professionals and volunteers working with "senior citizens" and 10 Orthodox rabbis participated. The seminar was sponsored by the Bar-Ilan University Brookdale Programme and the Religions Affairs Ministry, and was a follow-up to a similar one held with essentially the same participation and at the same place on May 9.

The professionals were mainly people working in the Jerusalem Municipality's "Senior Adult" programms, but also included government officials and university professors. The overwhelming majority were non-religious and women. Of the rabbis, four were communal rabhis from different parts of the country, including one former American, and the rest were former American rabbis now engaged in various professional and voluntary pursuits, all but one in Jerusalem. The ex-Americans are all members of the Rabbinical Council of America's Israel Region.

The head of Bar-Ilan University's school of social work. Prof. Meir (Frank) Lowenberg, himself a former American, told of thres aspe of his university's Brookdale Programme (of which he is chief consultant.) First, it is now apleting the first year of its "Open University for the Ared." in which about 500 retired persons are attending more than 200 courses, mainly in Jewish studies and the humanities, with the regular degree seeking students, as "auditors.". Scholarships are given to those who cannot pay the already-disco unted fees.

Second, the school he heads has begun training professionals specially to work with the aged. The seminars held last week and in May are the third aspect. Similar inter-disciplinary seminars will be held from time to time as the programme of cooperation between the country's social workers and rabbis develops.

Hassida Gevaryahu, Jerusalem municipal director of services for senior adults, stressed the need for rabbis and social workers to learn to appreciate the value of cooperating with each other. She noted that many Israell rabbis do not even know how to refer people to the local socialcommunal institutions, let alona how to cooperate with them, and called on the country's religious institutions to train rabbis not only to perform ritual or traditional religious-teaching functions, but also to fulfil a pastoral role. The rabbis of earlier generations, she said, had fulfilled this role and clergymen of all faiths in many parts of the world, especially in the West, still fulfil it.

She reported that her department is gradually expanding a programme of neighbourhood teams consisting of a social worker, a doctor and a nurse, and eaid it would be "a very good idea" to add a rabbi to each team.

Shlomo Ophir, programme director of senior adult centres in the Jerusalem municipality, stressed the need for rabbis in social-communal work. This is especially true, he said, in working with the aged, who tend to seek rabbis as teachers and even as counsellors, even if they were not before particularly religious or were not eo for most of their adult lives.

Ophir, who also spoke at the May 9 seminar, noted that Israel's over-65 population, which was 3.6 per cent of the general population in 1948, is increasing by 25,000 a year and the percentage has nearly trahled.

He said that Jerusalem has 40 centor-adult centres, where about 5,000 aged persons spend three or more hours a day engaged in a variety of projects including workshops, hobby groups, and courses. In addition to the several ecores of professional workers and 100 lay volunteers orking at these centres, only eight communal rabbis are cooperating with the centres. Rabbi Nattali (Fred) Hollander, in charge of the Brookdale Programme's community education projects, said that rabbis, whose education teaches them to be personifications and transmitters of Jewish-human values, must also learn "the professional side" of helping and teaching people. (Rabbi Hollander is a former New Yorker, where he worked in what is there known as pastoral psychiatry, for which he trained after getting his ordination.)

Rabbi Yisrael Friedman, president of the RCA's Israel region, said he was pleased that rabbis, social workers and the community at large in Israel are gradually coming to apprecisie the role that the former can and ought to fill in social-communal life.

Sephardi Chief Rabbi Ovadia Yosef called on both the rabbis and the social workers to "appreciste the power" that the former possess "to enrich people's lives."

At the May 9 seminar, Prof. A. Michael Davies, director of the Brookdale Institute of Gerontology and Adult Human Development at the Hebrew University, reported that a survey has found that the places most frequently visited by the aged are, in order of frequency, the sick-fund clinic, synagogue, and community centre. The "least satisfactory" service is the social-weifare service. He said that many of them do not know that it exists, or they do not know where it is situated or what kind of help they are entitled to and are ashamed to ask.

Elhanan Gatni, director of the retirees" authority in the Labour and Social Affairs Ministry, stressed that old age "is not a lack of desire to do things, but a lack of challenges presented hy society." Even young people, he said "chow signs of old age as a result of a challengeless environment.

Noting that in Jewish tradition the oldster was a cource of authority, he said that "modern, technological, industrial, secular society, which measures a person according to his economic value, kills a person iong hefore he dies spiritually."

Rabbi Yeshayahu (Simon) Dolgin, formerly of Los Angeles and now communal rabbi of the Ramot Eshkol neighbourhood of Jerusalem, said that "there is much for rabbis to do" in the ephere of social-communal work, but Israeli rabbis "are not really trained for this." What is more, he said, they are rarely asked, "because many Israelis do not know how to ask a rabbi."

Dr. Dov Shinnar, Brookdale's communications coordinetor, said that the communications media in Israel pay relatively little attention to the aged. There are no special publications for them (as there are for the young, for women, and for virtually the whole range of special-interest groups). Television and radio are "disproportionately geared for the young," with the press only "e littla better."

Prof. Yoel Shanan, head of the psychiatry eection at the Hebrew University psychology department, noted that "it is only 25 years since psychiatry began to concern itself with old age." He also said that the traditional role of the rabbi "as a social focus and inspiration" has been lost in largel; indeed, the Israeli rabbi "is sometimes not even seen as a constructive figure.

Tat-Aluf Gad Navon, chief chaplain to the Iarael Defence Forces, said: "It is not enough for rabble to deal with God; they must also go out to the people."

Religioue Affaire Minieter Aharon Abuhaizeira called on the social workers to use the rabbis and on the rabbis to let themselves be used

Rabhi Menahem (Emanuel) Rackman, also a former American, president of Bar-Ilan University and chairman of its Brookdale Programme, who presided, called on the social workers to belp the rabbis "to use their roles and their pastoral skills in dealing with the serious social and family problems affecting Israel society."

NEW YORK (AP). — The ad-ministration of President Jimmy Carter may violently disagree, but many Wall Street analysts are convinced that a recession is at hand. Most of the debate these days in the financial community focuses not on whether a slowdown will occur, but on how extensive it will be and how it will affect the stock market. Within the last three months. more and more investors have begun to accept the recession scenario," eaid Frank Mastrapasqua; an analyst at L.F. Rothschild, Unterberg, Towhin. "They are now " beginning to alk thow severe" and " what the implications are for car, porate profitability."

Former Ghana leader executed by new junta

ACCRA (Reuter). - Ghana's former head of state, Ignatius Acheampong. was executed by firing squad early yesterday after being convicted of quandering government funds.

The 47-year-old ex-army general stood trial before a revolutionary court set up by a group of junior officers who seized power in a coup 13 days ago.

The country's new rulers also announced their decision to delay by three months restoration of civilian rule, which had been scheduled to take place on July 1 by the ousted regime of General Fred Akuffo, But general elections are to be beld comorrow as planned.

Britisb trained Lt.-Gen. E.K Utuka, former commander of the country'e border guards, was also found guilty of corruption and executed. Akuffo is in custody and may face trial as well.

The general election campaign began last January when the Akuffo government lifted a eeven-year han on political party activities. Main issues bave been the country's stag-nant economy, inflation and allegations of a lack of morality in both public and private life.

According to official figures, inflation is running at over 100 per cent on an annual basis, pushing the price of such essential imported commodities as sugar, milk and baby food beyond the reacb of most Ghanaians.

ZURICH (AP). - The new 24-team format for the final round of the World Cup Soccer competition is almost certainly here to stay, the International Federation of Football Associations (FIFA) said on Friday. FIFA press chief Rene Courte, writing in the latest edition of "FIFA News," said that unless the 1982 tinals in Spain, where the new for-mat is being introduced for the first time, turn out to be a complete failure, there would not be "any possibility of reducing the number of teams to 16."

the British Lions move into a 5-2 lead before the 35-year-old King began to fight back.

King closed to within 4-5 and lost the chance of levelling the set 5-8 by sportingly conceding a let the net judge had missed. Goolagong took advantage and eventually broke King's service to lead 6-4.

The Australian looked to have the match ecwed up when she led 3-1 in the final set but King drew on her vast experience to get back on lavel

King had four break points in the ninth game, but equandered them all, and Evonne finally broke through to take the match after more than two hours.

It gave Ireland a 2-0 victory in the two-match series against Australia, following their 27-12 win in the first match in Brisbane.

WHAT LOOKS like a goat, tastes like an ibex and may one day help save a hungry Third World from starvation? The answer is a goatex and it's allve and well at Kibbutz Lahay.

The goatex (ya'ez in Hebrew) is a hybrid of a goat (ez) and an lbex (ya'sl). The idsa of crossing these two ruminants in order to obtain the specific advantages of each was that of Prof. Heinrich Mendelsohn of Tel Aviv University, who performed the first local experiments a decade ago. Later, experimentation was conducted at Sde Boker to ses if the two genuses (capra ibex and capra hircus) would successfully crossbreed and, in 1971, Hebrew University blologist Dan Rattner took over the project. Rattner transferred three of Prof. Mendelsohn's "guinea-goats" to hie home kihhutz, Lahav, just north of Beersheha, and proceeded to convert the initial scientific invectigation into a full-scale breeding programme.

There are four main types of goat in this country. The Sa'ansn, a native of Switzerland, is a large animal which gives an abundance of mlik but is too delicate for the difficult pasture conditions in the Middle East. It is the classic family goat, tied to a pole next to the farmer'e house or is found in very small herde. The Damascus goat shares similar qualities; it gives ample milk and meat hut is not very robust. The Sinai goat, on the other hand, is ae hardy as they come, but is a midget animal and of little commercial consequence.

Rattner's Idea was to take the hardy Beduin goat, which has a remarkable capacity for adaptation to arid conditions, and crose it with the wild ibex to produce a hybrid that would provide good meat under difficult desert conditions. He viewed the experiment as a poeeibie answer to the problem of aupplying large quantities of animal protein to the inhabitants of the desert and seml-desert regions of the world.

Little has been done abroad in this field of hybridieation. Swiss scientists tried, without euccess, to cross various kinds of goats at the end of the past century. In the 1950s, Soviet ecientists announced they were conducting experiments, but no authoritative word on goat hybridisation has since heen heard from that quarter.

Initially, the Nature Reserves Authority and the Society for the Protection of Nature opposed the hybridisation project as they feit that the lhex population of Israel should be protected from "contamination" from their cousins. They reasoned that this croee-genus mating was unnatural and that herde of goatexes would upset the delicate ecological balance of the wild lbexes. Their consent was given only after Rattner guaranteeed that no ya'es would leave the confines of Lahav without obtaining their permission.

Two of the animals with which Rattner began his project were straight hybrids, a male and a female, and the third was a male backcross to an lbex, l.e. ¾ lbex and ¼ goat. Today, he tends a herd of some 70 fsmales with different degrees of ibex and goat composition, and eeveral males. Most of the female goatexes are between 14 and 14 part ibex while the males lean more toward the lbex. It is apparently easier to mate mals ibexes with female goats than vice versa. Why goats? Why lbexee?

An Important characteristic for an animal that is to be raised for agricultural purposes is tameness. Thus, despite the fact that the lbexhas a tasty flesh, its extreme agility and natural response of fleeing from human beings would make it an unlikely candidate for the pot. Evan lbexes in captivity do not usually allow people to approach them. The goat, on the other hand, is a docile, fully domesticated animal, but its meat is rather tough and meagre. The advantages of a hybridous animal are obvious - as long as it acts like a goat and tastes like an lhex and not the other way around.

Beeldss, Rattner explains, the goat and the lhex constitute the only feasible combination of iocal animals known to biologists. In most cases, different types of animals will not mate at all, even when brought into close physical contact. A horse and a donkey can mate and even produce offspring, but the mule is infer-tile and thus a hybrid of this nature will survive for just one generation. The cole species that euccessfully producee fertile offspring is the wild lhex when mated with the domesticated goat. Even another ruminant as similar to the goat as the sheep cannot mate with an lbex.

The question that aprings to mind is, o coures, why hybridise at ali? Why not domesticate the lbex and be done? After all, domestic animals mature more quickly and thus attain sufficient weight for slaughtering much sooner than wild animals. At two years, a goat is already fully grown whereas the ihex is in no rush to mature; the later he reaches adulthood and joins hattle for the females, the stronger he is likely to be. However, Rattner contends that hybridisation is a much more viable option than domeetlcatlon. The domestication process extends over many generations and an experiment in New Zealand to domesticate deers for farming purposee has been going on for a long time without conclusive results.

Frankly, I bave partaken of goat meat only once, as the guest of a Negev Beduin come eight or nine years ago. Although I vaguely recall enjoying the meal, I am certainly no goat meat devotee. Even here, in the Middle East, where lamb and mutton have traditionally heen prized (and priced) above all other meat, goat has hardly been a popular victual.

To cook oid goat certain measures of desperation are needed. One old recipe calls for "simmering the goat to rags" while others euggest powerful spices and dried fruits as ingredients of disguise in the trus medleval style. However, kid may be cooked in the same way as lamh and, I am told, is truly delicious when roasted over charcoal or cooked with a stuffing of rice, chopped onions, nuts and raisins. Thus, the uppermost question in my mind, as I followed the kibbutznikblologist through the breeding pens and out into the open pasture was - what does goatex meat actually taste like?

Regrettably, it was not feasible to slaughter a young ya'sz in honour of my journalistic ad. vent and no tasting session was planned for the near future. I was thus constrained to accept my host's description of the merits of goatex flesh until such time as I may indulge in this new dish.

At regular intervals, goatexes are elaughtered and weighed to test the dagree of productivity. The percentage of sdible parts is already considerably higher than in the goat, where some 41-48 per cent of the carcass may be eaten. And the experiments in breeding increasingly more productive animals continus apace.

As for taste, there is no objective laboratory measure for this quality, Rattner explains, True, the amount of molsture, the percentage of protein, etc. may be measured and analysed, but neither these nor any of the other available criteria convey taste, which is a purely subjective sensation. Thus, the method employed is to give each of 80 randomiy eelected membars of the kibbutz three plates of meat, unspiced except for a little salt. Ons plate contains regular goat meat, the second meat from a 25 per cent lbex and a 75 per cent goat and the third meat from a 50 per cent hybrid. The results of this periodic poll show that the tasters consistently and significantly prefer the half-ibex/half-goat meat.

All the same, what does it taste like, I ask in the name of all the disenfranchised epicures outside Lahav. Somewhat like lamh, succulent, tender, but less fat, I am told. In fact, Ratiner contends, most Israelis of European stock are gulte incapable of differentiating between lamh and kid. If you like lamh, you'll love goatex.

And the new animal is quite kosher. Although both the goat and the iber have cloven hooves and chew the cud, Rattner wanted a conclusive ruling on the status of the hybrid before he committed himself to the arduous task of crossbreeding. He approached the chief rahbi of Beersheba, Ellahu Katz, who, after delving into the matter, declared the ya'ez kosher, publishing his ruling in "Torah U'mada" in August 1971.

Now the question that looms before the project is whether to expand the 70-strong berd to full-scale market proportions. Rattner feels that as a serious scientist there are still many questions concerning reproduction, feeding and veterinary matters that must he answered hefore the goatex becomes a viable commercial enterprise. However, in order to experiment on a broad scale, large sums of . money are necessary. After years of scraping for funds, Rattner last year obtained a grant from the Truman Foundation, which encourages rseearch applicable to the problems of developing nations. But this money, too, will soon be gone.

"I have no idea how much longer it will take;" he says, "but when we reach an optimal quality of meat and higher productivity I believe we'll be able to make a major contribution to the problem of protein deficiency in the Third World."

And, hopefully, here in Israel, gostex will be cheaper than lamh is today.

chould be etrictly avoided.

WHILE FRESH beef may sell exceptionally well in the butcher chops of Nerth Tel Aviv and Herzliya Pituah, most of us generally buy frozen meat at half the price (or no meat at all). Last year the average loracil ate approximately four bilos of fresh and nine kilos of frozen beef (as well as 35 kiles of poultryl.

The virtues of fresh versus frozen are hetly debated. Cattlemen and butchers of my acquaintance ewear thet fresh, locally-grown beef has a higher nutritional value than the imported frozen variety, Nutritioniets explain, however, that a loss of nutrificated content is likely only if the beef is frozen under home conditions, i.e. in the vicinity of -16°C. Sut 1f the beef is properly deep frozen at 40°C, the ice crystals form in such a way as to preserve the full flavour and food value of the meat. As long es the beef is thawed just once, prior to cooking, the run-off of liquids sheuld cause no more than a five per cent decrease in nutritional value. Of course, repeated thawing and refreezing docs not only adversely affect nutrition; it elso allowe bacteria to multiply, and

One valid reason for paying more for fresh beef is to obtain the choice hindquarter cuts, such as eirloin. topside and filet. For reasons of kashrut, all frozen imports are from the forequarters (although ritually elaughtered and elnewed freab hindportions are quite kosher). Another is that the best beef comes from young animals and the intensive system of raising cattle in Israel allows earlier slaughter than in most other countries. Thus local freeh beef is likely to be younger and tastler than imported frozen beef, which is more mature. Finally, one should be aware that in defrosting, some liquids are lost with a concomitant drop in weight. This means that the real difference in price between fresh and frozen beef is a little less than initially seems apparent. Frozen beef is imported mainly from Argentiaa, Australia, Rumania, Uruguay and, most recently, South Africa. The best imports come from Rumania, maintains Meir Ysgli, director of the Government Trade Administration in the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Tourism. Rumanian beef tends to be younger than that imported from the other countries, he saye, although Argentinian beef is also very good as the cattle there do not have to cover large distances in order to pasture. The reason that U.S. beef has not gone over well bere. Yagil says, is that it tends to be more beavily marbled with fat than other countries' meat and Israelis tend to prefer lean beef.

However, the leanness of meat can prove fallacious. The fat provides much of the flavour and succulence of beef and an ideal cut is one that is well marbied with flecks of fat. Furthermore, lean moat may not be as economical a buy as it may seem, since it contracts when cooked to a greater extent than fat meat. This is dae to the fact that fat meat contains less moisture than lean.

In 1978, 35,000 tons of imported frozen beef were marketed in comparison to about 13,000 tons of locally produced beef. As far as the reputed superiority of fresh beef is concerned, Yagil's opinion is clear and moaosyilable: a "myth", he says.

The government agency sells a kilo of boasless frozen beef for IL50.40 (tncluding VAT). The wholesaler then rescils it to the butcher for IL54.32 and the public finally buys the beef at various prices, depending on the particular cot (eee table centre).

Very few shoppers are able to differentiate between the various cuts and most place their faith in their butchers. While not all these gentlemen engage in the reprehensible practice of mixing their meats, the consumer should be aware of the fact that a few do. Since the butcher purchases all the beef for the same wholesale price, he makes his profit by selling more of the higher priced cuts and less of the cheaper cuts. As he makes only a meagre 18 agorot profit on the sale of a kilo of brisket, an unscrupulous butcher might be tempted to throw in a bit with your IL74 per kilo order of shoulder roast. And even though the customer may insist that the ground meat be or she is about to purchase is freshly ground, it is rather difficult to be exactly sure what the butcher is throwing into the whirring electric grinder. Another trick utilized by some butchers is to defrost frozen beef and sell it in the guise of fresb meat. While I admit I am unable to tell the difference, my colleague Martha Meisels wrote recently that fresh beef looks "dry" and doee not release drops of blood on to the display tray, whereas thawed frozen beef is likely to release liquid, in-cluding blood. The safest way is to buy only from a reputable butcher or a chain supermarket that would not risk its reputation for a little extra profit.

This unsavoury practice may soon become impossible, as the government is considering importing beef in smaller eections. At present, frozen beef is generally sold in large chunks which the butcher must dissect for individual customers, but, Yagil reveals, the plan is to import cartons of frozen beef containing small fully frozen, ready-packaged

As an aid to ehopping for frozen beef, look at the concise tabis of the avaliable cuts (centre).

Open a pouch along breast bone of lamb and stuff with lemon forcemeat, leaving plenty of epace, as it swells during cooking. Sew up well. Any remaining etuffing can be shaped into halls and baked alongside the lamb. Lightly brown an assortment o: coarsely cut seasonal vegetables (onions. oarrots, celery) to cover the bottom of the baking tin. Season vegetables with salt and pepper, and place seasoned lamh on top. Bake in a medium oven until golden brown and crispy and when tested with a ekewer, the juicee are clear and slightly pinky.

Bring to a boil over high heat, reduce to low, cover the pan and simmer until the beets chow no resistance when pierced with a small skewer or knife. This may take from 30 minutes to 2 hours; add boiling water if neceeeary. Drain the beets and, when they are cool enough to handle, slip off their skins.

The potatoee, earrots and rutabaga may be cooked together in a large pan of lightly salted bolling water. Drop the vegetables into the pot and cook briskly, uncovered, for abont 20 minutes.

Cook the cabbage separately by dropping the quarters into enough salted boiling water to cover completely. Reduce the heat to low and eimmor partially covered for about 15 minutes, or until the cabbage is almost tender but etili somewhat resistant. Drain thoroughly and cut eech quarter into halves.

To serve the boiled dinner, earve the beef and arrange the elleee slightly overlapping attractively elong the centre of a large, heated pistter. Surround the meat with mounds of Individual vegetablee and garnish with parsley. Horseradish.

Blossom Wiesen of Carmel, Haifs sent us ber recipe, which serves "six hefty portions and is balf the price of one using beef." Polynesian Pieces 1 kilo dark turkey meat fuice of 2 lemons 2 tbsp soy sauce 4 tbsp oll optional: slicee of onion and green pepper

Cut up the meat into large chunks and pour the other ingredients over It. Leave in fridge for one or two days, stirring once or twice. The meat can now be grilled, eithar outdoors on skewers or in the kitchen. Serve grilled meat together with Its sauce over rice, accompanied with a green salad.

In England, writes Vera Freudmann, now of Herzliya, she used to make this dieb with mineed veal, but ebe finds it just as successful with the frozen mineed turkey available

1 kilo minced turkey

2 eggs 6 onions 1 green pepper % litre ehicken stock 1 wineglass white wine little flour, matzo meal, hrend crumbs and oil

Mix turkey mince with eggs, finely chopped onions and enough maizo meal to give right consistency for forming small balls. Roll the balls in breadcrumbs and fry in n little of until brown.

Remove from pan and add to oil 4 eliced onions and one large sliced green pepper. When soft add a little flour and chicken stock made from water and soup powdar. Add white wine, bring to the boil stirring and add meat balls. Simmer gently for 25 minutes and serve.

Finally, Leah Flanzer's Egg Foo Yong, which she says can be made using either the fresh bean sprouts found in the supermarket, or sauted grated carrots.

THANK YOU for your continuing interest. We are again sending those readers whose recipes were published a copy of Dry Bones' earloon book. For the next Today Food page in July, which will be devoted to cummer food, readers are asked to send in recipes for cooling dishes, preferably those needing little or no cooking. Send your recipes to Haim Shapiro, Food Editor, The Jerusalem Post, POB 81, Jerusalom.

In our house there were always complaints: "Again? Chicken?" Since I've brought "Mili" prepared chickens home, my problems were over. "Mili" prepares battered and breaded chicken parts. (like shnitzel), what the Americans call "Fried Chicken". All I have to do is warm the chicken, prepare a small side dish of vegetables - and that's it! Everyone loves the taste, and I love the easy preparation. Now, at our house they say: "Chicken again !!!"

> "Mili" prepared meals are manufactured by Milosun a division of Milouot Industries that belong to the kibbutzim of the Western Gallilee, a sophisticated and modern industry that manufactures ready to cat chicken and turkey products; just warm and serve and wait for the compliments.

Among the prepared chilled meals made by "Mili" you will find:

- 2. Battered and breaded chicken parts. 3. Turkey breast chicken.

JUDY CARR says beggars can be choosey about their food

HAVE ANY readers ever given serious thought to bow they would eat if their regular cource of income and/or savings vanished overnight? This sounds a purely hypothetical queetion. I oever dreamed It could happen to me - till lt did.

About three years ago, the in-vestments I had in the bank were wiped away, through circumstances that were entirely unforeseen. Such mundane things as bills, income tax, etc. can always wait. In a situation like this, what matters is how you exist from day to day.

Some fortunate people can exist on a sandwich or two. I am not one of

On the whole, my diet was quite them -- and this article is addressed tasty and filling — and maybe healthier than when I was stuffing to those who, like me, literally cannot survive without solid meals. I asked around for "breadline" recipes and my "needy" friends came up with coms ideas, though of course you will need SOME money. First, a cheese and vegetable recipe. Recommended is a solid white cheese, such as Kana'an, with any vegetabls in season. A good Idea is broad beans. Cook the vegetables with margarine on top and serve with the cheese.

A very satisfying meal can be made by steaming red cabbage till it is soft and cerving with fried onions, cottage cheese and eshel. This is a real filler.

Another filler is: Cook green beams in very little water and before they are quite done, add sliced tomato and soaked soya chips.

What about an egg dish? Although eggs bave gone up, they are still one of the cheapest foods going. Steam an eggplant till nearly soft, cool if till you can handle it, cut it into six elices, lightly fry these slices and serve them with a poached or fried egg oo top.

Daily

THIS MENU was drawn up with the elderly in mind, but it will provide good goddelines for all adults

It contains the daily requirement of about 1,700 calories for women and 2,000 for men and includes 80 grams of protein, 150 to 200 grams of carbohydrates and 40 to 50 grams of fat. Included are the aix basic groups of food necessary for essential nutrients

The milk group contains more nutrients than any other. It includes calcium and phosphorous for healthy bones and teeth, first class protein and iron for building muscle and blood cells, Vitamin B complex (especially riboflavin), and, in the fat of the milk, Vitamins A and D for nerves, skin and eves.

Two glasses of milk or leben are required daily. They may be sub-stituted for by 45 grams of white cheese or 30 grams of yellow cheese.

The protein group includes meat, chicken, fish, liver, eggs, cheese, milk, suis and legumes, such as peas, beans and lentils. Textured soys has a very high protein content, but it must be soaked and squeezed out, to extract insoluble carbohydrates. Wheat germ and sunflower seeds are good sources of first class protein.

All these protein foods contain iron and B vitamins for muscle, blood, skin and cell growth and repair. Protein prevents fatigne and must be present in every msal to insure the best utilization of bread, cereals and vegetables. At least a third to balf of the daily protein should be from these source

The daily diet should include two or three portions of meat or cheess or a cup of cooked legumes or 25 grams of nuts, or an egg a day or four eggs plus four egg whites week-

A pearl in every sauce

Food writer RENE MOKARDI completes his gourmet's tour

NOW HERE is a story, a true story about a place I had decided to visit lly in a Belt comething or other, and at the very moment I set foot in the restaurant, here was the Boss himself, be'ch'vodo ouveratime greeting me with: "You chouldn't have come today; today is a bad day; two of our workers have been called up for miluyim and the cock's boy has burned the gravy." I said O.K., and a few days later, pinkt as I was opening the same door, the Landlord halted me with: "Do me a toyve; a special toyve; we just bave had an unexpected order for 49 guests for a conference taking placa on the second floor, and I'm afraid there's a slight balagan ... The third time, I said to myself that I was not going to be lured into a trap by the bistroquet's honeyed tongue. The third time - and like in all Jewish tales where things go in threes - I was very careful not to be perceived by any over-watchful eye and I curreptitiously ganeved myself Apache-like to the sombrest corner of the dining room where I silently seated myself facing the wail. The gentieman at the next table but a few cubite away ordered some first course, the national hummus and tahina, to be followed by stuffed marrow, and I asked the waiter to bring ms the same. I must regretfully admit that it was quite a poor show as far as first courses go. And as a main dish? The gentleman asked for tali-bakar (roast beef), so I begged the waiter to reiterate. Till then, everything went according to plan: nobody had recognized me. But what did God Almighty want? He wanted to embarrass me; instead of sending back the faithful servant with my order of tzi-bakar, He sent the Boss himself. And wboever claimed that God'e ways were velled in mystery made the understatement of the century. For he said "Ha!" - not God - the Boss. "You ordered a roast? Really, you oughtn't to have. That isn't good enough for you." I, quite loudly enough to be overheard, retorted, "Damn it! Why don't you tell this here. Gentleman that it isn't good enough for him? Why then should he eat the stuff? Now, I ask you: who the bell am I writing for? For myseli or for the unknowing - and sometimes guilible - public? I ordered roast; I will get the roast; I will taste it; I will pay for it; you shall give me a receipt and as for its quality, you will be able to read my report in the newspaper?" And what do you think did happen? Exactly that. The roast was as lousy as the appetizer - something that reminded me of grimalkin-sausage the trimmings worse than the meat and the sweet as nasty as the punishment for having committed and recidivated - the Seven Capital Sins. The wine, for having tarried in its bottle for who knows how many moons in full view of the sun, had become undrinkahle: I did get my receipt and wrote that li was an unthinkable bloody shame to dish out such swful 'rata'' to paying customers. And do you think that the aforementioned restainateur says Shalom nicely to me when he chances to ses me? No, he doesn't. And such is the price of honesty. And here is another one: Were I one to imitate other people'e for one of the restaurant guide books. That happened on a dark and windy winter evening. I had already had two buge meals the same day, but I was pushed for time because the Editor had warned me that the dead-line kept approaching, sbod with seven-league boots, so I said, "The hell with it, young lady," to my Faithful Assistant. "We're going to enjoy a third meal today, not counting breakfast we had at 11 a.m." We walked, or rather shlept to the restaurant, trying to work up an appetite, beavily sat down and ordered the cream of the top of the menu. Our eenses dimmed by too much food and even mors wine gulped the same dey, we were still capable of discerning the good quality of what was served to us, but as far as swallowing was concerned, even the threat of impalement or some other torture couldn't have moved us to keep the food down. So, as not to offend the ballabait, I discreetly dispocketted my everpresent catty-bag oftsn used when baving baif-doubts about the freshness of food, for my tom-cat is also my final touch-stone for matters of quality, It (the cat) being doted

GREATER DAN REGION ASSOCIATION OF TOWNS (Sewerage) Teader No. 114/D-4/ISP/79

ISRAEL SEWERAGE PROJECT

Greater Dan Association of Towns (Sewerage) (invites contractors to submit bids for laying an 34" diameter concrete pipe-line in Hayarkon St., Tel Aviv, between Allenby and Trumpeldor.

Tender Documents and Forms of Tender can be obtained against payment of IL2,000.- (nonreturnable) from the Engineering Department of the G.D.R.A. of Towns (sewerage), 24 Nahalat Binyamin Street, Tel Aviv. Bidders must submit their bids in duplicate, on the forms provided and in compliance with the conditions of the tender. Bids, accompanied by a bank guarantee of 5% (five per cent) of the bid total, valid for a period of 120 days from the last day set for the submission of the tender, must be placed in the tender box not later than July 22, 1979.

The envelope containing the blds should be marked:

The Israel Sewerage Project Tender No. 114/D-4/18P/79 G.D.R. Association of Towns (Sewerage)

Bids arriving after the closing date and bids submitted without the bank guarantee will not be considered.

Terms of Payment: 90% in cash against an approved interim bill, as specified in the tender documents. Bids may be submitted by contractors who are registered in the Contractors' Register under symbol 400, for works to the value of IL16,000,000. The person submitting the tender must attach to his bid a copy of his registration as a contractor in the Contractors' Register.

A site inspection for contractors will be held on July 3, 1979, leaving from the office of G.D.R.A. of Towns at 9.00 a.m.

Because of the epecial nature of the work and the complexity of its implementation, the association will definitely take into consideration the capability of the party offering to execute the contract, and his willingness to meet the conditions laid down. The tender board is not bound to accept the lowest or any bid for the entire work or parts thereof.

A test for Bonn

THE PRESENT visit in Europe of Egyptian Vice President Hosni Mubarek has again drawn attention to the strange position adopted by the major Western European nations to the Israel-Egyptian peace agreement.

Led by France, which has been patently cool to the agreement, the other European nations have tended each in their own way to display reservation.

The first clear indication of this came on a previous visit by Mubarek to Europe, just one week before the peace agreement signing ceremony in Washington. Already at that time, the French were less than lukewarm.

In Bonn, on the other band, Mubarek found that the West German Government was prepared to take a more kindly and hopeful view.

Unfortunately, bowever, since that time in March, the Germans too have begun to show different colours. Prompted by a deeire to remain in step with France, and by nervousness about relations with Saudi Arabia and other oil suppliers, the Bonn Government bas, especially in recent weeks, gone out of its way to appear to woo the Rejectionist states.

The German Foreign Minister is preparing a Middle East vieit to the Rejectionist states, but not to Egypt, and Bonn has so far been noticeably reserved about Egyptian requests for a new and more liberal programme of economic aid.

It is not surprising therefore that Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has also decided to drop plans to visit Israel in the near future. though this decision may also be related to more specifically Ieraei-German matters.

At a time when all states who have an interest and stake in Middle East developments should be intent on trying to help sustain and expand the peace process, the European attitude is more than curious. And in the case of Germany, which has always fostered its relations with Egypt, it is doubly so.

For a high priority should now be given to helping President Sadal achieve the economic advances he so ardently desires for Egypt. His whole policy of orientation upon the U.S. and the West - of which peace with Israel is a part - will in the end depend upon the response be receives from the countries to which he has turned.

Certainly it cannot be in the Western interest to frustrate this historic change in Egyptian policy. Certainly it cannot be in the German interest - whether that interest be defined as European comity or Middle East oil - to support policies whose logic would drive Egypt back toward Moscow and war.

After the Israel-Egyptian peace agreement was eigned there were calls for a vast Western aid programme for the Middle East, and especially Egypt. These calls were voiced primarily in the U.S. And no doubt the United States should play the leading roll in launching what some have called a new Marshali Plan for the Middle East.

But the Europe of today, and especially the Germany of today, is accustomed to taking the initiative. Instead of making nervous overtures to the rejectionists, whose only real political prescription for the Middle East is more war, Germany should act on its genuine interests and rally Western Europe and the U.S. into a common effort to help Sadat, to belp the peace process, and to persuade the nay sayers in the Middle East that their best interests lie in joining what Egypt and Israel have started.

BEGIN'S ENEMIES WITHIN autonomy to come into being at all 'THOSE WHO think that settlements on the West Bank in general, and that at Eilon Moreh in particular, are a provocation, says Premier Menahem Begin, should be ashamed of themselves: they follow the evil path of the enemies of our people. A provocation, eay the dic-tionarice, is an act that excites anger, resentment, irritation; an incitement. If Eilon Moreh is not all of that, one wonders what it is.

If Begin denies that - whatever be may wish the settlements to signify - they do in fact excite anger and resentment, both among our cnemice-just-turncd-friends. . the Egyptians, and among such present enemies" as President Carter and the rest of the world; if he does not perceive that they do in fact incite even the last of the moderate Palestinians (if any still remain), without whose consent there can be no autonomy and no peace, to ever more violent hatred, then - not for the first, and certainly not for the last, time - be is out of touch with reality. He cubstitutee what be wishes to be for what is. He resents the resentment.

When Dayan and Weizman op-posed the establishment of Eilon Moreb, they probably argued in terms of political expediency. They must have regarded the eettlement as an obstacle to the antonomy negotiations. According to Begin'e latest dictum, they too should be ashamed of themselves for in basing themselves on reason, even if only within the confines of their own annexationist ideology, they too must have adopted the evil path of our enemies. Indeed, reason itself will soon be declared the enemy of the people, for irrationality brooks no opposition. Begin'e latest eredo arrogantly excommunicates" the overwhelming majority of the Israeli people. That majority has remained sane and rational, even if it is for the moment politically ineffectual. Ruled for too long by a hide-bound geron-tocracy and a heartless technocracy, it lost its bearings in the aftermath of the Yom Kippur war and fell into disarray. Too many people pinned their hopes on the one-day wonder of the Democratic Movement for Change, and thus, two years ago, made It possible for Begin to rise to power, The disarray still persists. Faut de micux, many still eupport Begin. But they support only Begin the peacemaker, the leader-for-life of a raucous opposition which only he could have muzzled, thereby obtaining the power to push through concessions for peace that another government might bave been unable to make.

The majority that etill stands behind Begin has not been won over to any shallow Land of Ierael ideology with its reification of myths. It is rapidly becoming tired of an economic mismanagement that can find shelter only behin" an issue as monumental as peace. It became appalled, iong before Knesset Speaker Yitzhak Shamir did, with the virtual disintegration of government under Begin's firm In condemning those who think the establishment of settlements in the West Bank is provocation, Prime Minister Begin is "excommunicating" the majority of Israelis, writes The Post's MEIR MERHAV.

That majority does not really give a fig about Ellon Moreh and does not accept the false cecurity arguments adduced in justification of its es-tablishment. After all, it accepted with equanimity the return to Egypt, and eventual removal, of the Rafish settlemente, where security argumants at least had some prima ie force.

With its practical common sense. the majority therefore sees Eilon. Moreb (and the many more Eilon Moreh's that Begin promised two years ago) for what it is - a provocation.

But this view is not confined to those who see cettlements ac destructive to peace, to Israel Itself, and those who regard them as an illtimed and unnecessary political fol-

THE LAND OF ISRAEL hawks of all hues, more than anyone else. themselves view the cettlements as an act of defiance, intended to demonstrate that, Camp David and peace treaty notwithstanding, the superpatriots cannot be diverted from their purpose. For them, the ecttlements are not merciy a provocation in objective fact, but also in intent. For they are out to hobble the government, to torpedo the peace. And they do not hesitate to say so.

Whether intentionally or not, Begin plays their game. Unable to reconcile his own eberlabed irrationalities with what he must know is dictated by political reality; torn between his affinity for the hawks and his realization that they undermine bis eredibliity and restrict his freedom of action; badly trightened by the tide of public disgust at the domeetic malperformance of his government that has just swept into his own political backyard; and now seeing the sole remaining plank of his support - his peace policy - being shaken, be vents his frustration in an outburst of anger,

True to character, Begin fumes at a word - provocation; true to style, the buil be published last week reiteratce the icgalietic justifications for pressing ahead with the settlements, again recites what be promised or did not promise President Carter at Camp David, and repeats what is or is not included in the peace treaty. All that, however, is completely beaide the point. The settlements certainly are a provocation in terms both of the Camp David agreements. the language of which is plain, and of the Egyptian-American reading of what the autonomy plan is meant to be, But they are also a provocation even in the preposterous interpretation that Begin puts on the concept of autonomy.

.For whatever autonomy may mean, it can never be implemented unless there is some cooperation by come Palectinians. Unlees one accepted in advance that it would be a transitional stage towards a Palestinian state, it would probably have had only a slim chance of being accepted by the Palestinians, even in the way the Egyptians and Americans understand It.

. But even if their reading was not poles apart from Begin'e, had be been sincere, at least according to his own lights, and wanted his autonomy to come into being, he should have gone out of his way to enlist at least a modicum of cooperation by the Palestinians.

This would have involved a relaxation of Israel'e military rule on the West Bank, the restriction of Its intervention to the minimum needed for security, the granting of the greateet poesibie personal and political liberty consistent with security and the co-existence that Begin boids up as his vision of the future, and the unequivocal demonstration that, as long as Israel rules the occupied territories, the personal eccurity of Arabs as well as Jews is cafeguarded and that lawbreakers, whatever their nationality, are-dealt with even-handedly . It would, above all, have required that no settlements be set up before agreement on autonomy is reached.

Instead, Israel'e military rule has become harsher, and reprisals more brutal. Personal liberty has become more restricted. Political activity, even if it is non-violent, has been almost completely stamped into the ground. The vigliante activities of Gusb Emunim and their junatic fringe in the Meir Kahane gang are tolerated, Jewish law-breakers are treated with kid gloves.

Above all, settlements are being put up not only on public land but also, contrary to the government'e own resolutions, on private land.

And, given the Arab sensitivity to anything connected with land, a censitivity in which nationalism is combined with the peasant'e attachment to bls ancestral coil, these settlements ensure that for every peripatetic Jewish cettler there will be a thousand more irreconcilable Arab rejectionists.

THE SETTLEMENTS preclude any Palestinian participation in the. peace process, whether within the framework of an autonomy plan, or any other scheme.

But they are also a provocation as far as the Egyptians and Americans are concerned. As co-signatories of the Camp David agreements and the peace treaty in which the autonomy plan is an integral component, they are jointly responsible for the lm-plementation of autonomy.

Autonomy is to be a transitional stage. The status of the territorice is to be negotiated after five years. Any attempt to change the status of the occupied territories in the interim, through settlements, is a provoca-tion. It makes it impossible for the Egyptians and the Americans to stand by their commitments and demonstrate to the other Arab countries and the Palestinians that the peace treaty with Egypt, including the autonomy plan, can be a stepping-stone towards a colution of the Palestinian problem and comprebensive peace.

For all practical purposes, it is immaterial whether or not Begin made his own interpretation of autonomy clear to the co-signatories of the agreements from the outset. What matters is that be is now making It imposelhie to implement the agreements on even his interpreta-

If be did not make his meaning clear, and had reservations when be signed the agreements, then he was devious and will not be held credible. If he did make his meaning plain, as be claims, and yet, with all his pedantry of legalistic formulation, signed documents that in any plain reading say the opposite of what be now claims them to mean (or at least not to preclude), then he must have succumbed to that amalgam of persuasion, pressure and pageantry known as the "epirit of Camp David." If this is so, he has the constancy of a weathervane. But perhaps Begin did not mean of Palestinian rejectionism and expected that it would relieve him, as well as the Egyptians and Americans, of any commitment in. der that head. Perhaps he hoped declaratione to the contrary netwithstanding, gradually to wear Egypt away from its support of the Palestinians, so that it ended up with a separate peace with Israel, leaving Begin a free hand in "Judea and Samaria. If that is so, he has grossly up. derestimated Egypt's commitment to the Palestinians. Even if one assumes that Egypt may one day tire of the Palestinians and leave them to their own devices, this can happen only if Israel first proves that it has done all it can to fulfi fig own undertakings and has made it. possible for Egypt to honour her obligations.

Perhaps he trusted in the obstinacy.

Any expectation that in the end nothing will come of antonomy, and that the sabotaging of its chances really makes no great difference, also, underestimates the American commitmant to proceeding towards a comprehensive peace via a mitiga-tion, if not yet an ultimate solution, of the Palestinian problem.

BUT PERHAPS the simplest explanation of Begin's strategy is that he has none, and that, far from being the resolute, far-elgbted leader his followers take him to be, be is buffeted by forces he cannot control and hemmed in by realities be never quite perceives. Perhaps he just gropes in the dark, hoping thus to muddle through and to hold on to e bit of Samaria, a slice of Judes anda. postponed claim to sovereignty, to keep the Yehuda Ben-Meirs contented, and to salve his own conscience

COULD EUROPE'S law makers and bureaucrats be persuaded to speak a single language? Or to contend with perhaps two or three?

Serhaps two or three? Struggling with six official langueges, the nine-member Euro-pean Community already cmploys 400 official interpreters (compared with the UN's 160 in Geneva and New York combined). And the forthcoming enlargement of the Community will add Spanish, Greek and Portuguese to the existing official languagce of Englieb, French, German, Italian, Danish and Geelle, creating 36 possible com-binations for translation and calling ior twice the existing staff of interpreters.

Henri Burgmans, the former Rector of the College of Europe at Bruges, has set out the options open to the Community In a discussion paper which is likely to provoke a heated and prolonged debate. For its author would save the Community from becoming a modern Tower of Babel by distinguishing between "major" and "minor" languages a distinction which virtually ensures the rejection of any such idea through numerical superiority.

The discussion paper. "Towards a European Cultural Policy," published by the influential private European Cooperation Fund, considers and rejects the proposition that there might ever be a common European language. In the absence of that, it

READERS' LETTERS

NORWEGIAN HELICOPTERS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir. — The following statement bas been issued by Brigadier-General Martin Vadset, Acting Force Com-mander, United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon.

"In connection with the coming replacement of the Norwegian belicopter wing of UNIFIL by a similar unit from Italy, Monday'e edition of The Jerusalem Post earried a report which does not give a true picture of the eituation. The report quotes a Norwegian pilot as saying that he and his fellow pilots prefer to return home because of their refusal to fly over PLO-held territory and Major Haddad's refusal to allow overflights. UNIFIL wishes to elarify that all helicopter flights are undertaken in accordance with strictly enforced security measures assuring the necessary safety conditions for both crew and passengers. The replace-ment of the Norwegian unit should be eeen as a routine operational change. It is worth recalling that the Norwegian Government has maintained the beliwing since the inception of UNIFIL and that it will con-tinue to keep its medical and maintenance companies as well as

Its infantry battalion." UNITED NATIONS SPOKESMAN Jerusalem.

ASHAMED

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, - The government, with the sensitivity, civility and consideration of a Mack truck, moves into purely Arab areas, running bulldozers over other peoples plowed land and acts in every way the barsh occupying power. In whose name? In my name, too? I will have no part of it. I will not be identified with it. I feel gahamed and bumiliated.

I came to live in a country governed by Jews and for Jews and with no majority curtailing the rights of a helpless and defenceless minority, cowed by baton-wielding Isratils. Shall we see Jews emigrate from Israel for political reasons?

My heart goes out to the frightened Arab giri in Hebron and to the "ex-propriated" Arab farmer in Ellon Moreh.
